"Pop, I wonder if there are more . . . or is our family just we four?" asked a little Road Runner one day.

"Many more," said Papa. "We're a great big family."

"But where, oh where, can they all be?" asked the others, surprised.

"Over that ridge and down below . . . beep, beep . . . I left the family long ago."

"Oh, can we go and see them all? We could really have a ball," cried one.

"Well — uh — maybe so — we'll see," said Papa. Then, after a moment, he went on, "In truth, they might not welcome me."

"Oh, no!" said one. "That can't be so!"

"Well," said Papa, "I was young and I thought I knew . . . beep, beep . . . exactly what I ought to do. So, to my parents' great dismay, I left them all and went my way. My folks thought that it was sad, for I was but a lad," he said a bit wistfully. "But then you really ought to know . . . the family, and so we'll go," Papa decided.

"Beep, beep! Hurray!" shouted the young ones. "We're going to have a holiday!"

Wile E. Coyote heard the shouting and hurried to see what it was all about.

"They're off to somewhere special," he thought. "I'll just tag along behind."

But Wile E. Coyote was soon left far behind, as the Road Runners sped off. Over sand dunes and around shrubs, they traveled, beeping happily all the way. At last, they reached the bottom of the ridge.

"Over the ridge and down below, is the place we're going to go," said Papa.

Eagerly, they started up the ridge. On top, one exclaimed, "Beep, beep! Look! I can see . . . some members of our family!"

As Papa and the youngsters started down, an elderly Road Runner paused to watch.

"Beep, beep!" he cried. "Come, everyone . . . I think I see my long-lost son!"

All of the family gathered about, happily excited and welcoming them warmly.

The next days were filled with fun and feasting, as the hills echoed with happy "beep beeps." But then it was time to go.

With a merry "beep, beep," the Road Runners started off, but soon they found themselves slowing down. Before long, Papa panted, "I think that all of us had best . . . stop a bit and take a rest."

As they paused beneath a bush, Papa went on, "The feast and play was all great fun. But now we're all too fat to run!"

As the Road Runners dozed, a voice suddenly crowed, "Aha! I've got you now!"

It was Wile E. Coyote, who had been patiently lying in wait for them!

"Oh, no!" cried Papa, as Wile E. pounced at them. "On your feet — we've got to go!"

Frightened into action the Road Runners started off with the Coyote in close chase.

"Ow! Ow!" screeched one lad, as Wile E. snatched a tail feather. "He's got me now!"

Then, "Ooh!" screeched another. "He got me, too!" as one more tail feather went!

"Hurry! Hurry! Don't dismay!" shouted Papa. "Follow me — we'll get away!" and he darted in and out around the brush.

At last, Wile E. Coyote, out of breath, had to give up the chase, and the Road Runners reached home safely.

"That was close," shuddered a youngster. "Ol' Wile E. . . . almost got a hold on me!"

"Yes," agreed Papa. Then he vowed, "Never again, will we feast and play . . . and get too fat on a holiday! For, as you can plainly see, that's a hazard for you and me!"
